

1 Corinthians 1:6

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Even as the testimony of Christ was confirmed in you:

Analysis

---

Even as the testimony of Christ was confirmed in you (kathos to martyrion tou Christou ebebaitothe, καθὼς τὸ μαρτύριον τοῦ Χριστοῦ ἐβεβαίωθη)—The verb bebaioo (βεβαίω, "to confirm, establish, make firm") is legal/commercial language for guaranteeing a contract or validating testimony. The testimony of Christ (martyrion tou Christou) is the gospel message about Christ that Paul preached, which the Holy Spirit validated through spiritual gifts and transformed lives.

Paul's point: their spiritual abundance (vv. 4-5) is evidence that the gospel he preached was genuine, authenticated by divine power. This will become crucial in his later defense of apostolic authority against those claiming to follow other leaders (vv. 12-13). The gifts don't prove the Corinthians' superiority but confirm the truth of the message they received.

Historical Context

In a culture of competing philosophical schools, each claiming superior wisdom, Christians needed assurance that the gospel was not just another human philosophy. The manifestation of supernatural gifts (healing, prophecy, tongues, miracles) provided empirical confirmation that God was at work—though the Corinthians later confused the gifts with spiritual maturity, requiring Paul's correction in chapters 12-14.

Study Questions

1. How do spiritual gifts serve as confirmation of the gospel's truth rather than proof of individual superiority?
2. In what ways might we mistake spiritual gifts for spiritual maturity?
3. How does viewing gifts as testimony about Christ rather than about ourselves change our use of them?
