

1 Corinthians 10:8

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Neither let us commit fornication, as some of them committed, and fell in one day three and twenty thousand.

Analysis

Neither let us commit fornication, as some of them committed, and fell in one day three and twenty thousand—Paul references Israel's sexual immorality with Moabite women at Baal-peor (Numbers 25:1-9). The Israelites joined pagan worship through sexual rituals, provoking God's wrath. The verb porneuōmen (πορνεύωμεν, "commit fornication") covers all sexual immorality, not just prostitution.

Paul states three and twenty thousand died, while Numbers 25:9 records 24,000. This minor discrepancy may reflect that 23,000 died by plague in one day, while others died subsequently, or Paul rounds the number. The emphasis is the swift, devastating judgment: in one day (mia hēmera, μιᾷ ἡμέρᾳ)—divine wrath fell suddenly on covenant breakers.

For Corinth, this warning had urgent application. The city was notorious for sexual immorality, and the church struggled with it (5:1, 6:12-20). Some Corinthians apparently viewed temple prostitution or sexual license as compatible with Christianity. Paul warns: sexual sin joined to idolatry brings swift judgment. God's holiness hasn't changed from Sinai to Corinth.

Historical Context

The Baal-peor incident combined idolatry and sexual sin—Moabite women seduced Israelite men into both physical immorality and worship of Baal. This syncretism nearly destroyed Israel before Phinehas's zealous action stayed the plague. Corinth's culture similarly blended religious ritual, sexual activity, and social dining. Paul insists Christians must maintain absolute separation from such compromise.
