

1 Corinthians 10:9

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Neither let us tempt Christ, as some of them also tempted, and were destroyed of serpents.

Analysis

Neither let us tempt Christ, as some of them also tempted, and were destroyed of serpents—This verse references Numbers 21:5-6, where Israel spoke against God and Moses, despising the manna. God sent seraphim (fiery serpents) whose bites killed many Israelites. The verb ekpeirazōmen (ἐκπειράζωμεν, "tempt/test/put to the test") describes presumptuous testing of God's patience—pushing boundaries to see how much sin He'll tolerate.

Remarkably, Paul says they tempted Christ (some manuscripts read "the Lord"), identifying Christ as the One Israel provoked in the wilderness. This reinforces v. 4's assertion that Christ was present with Israel. To tempt Christ is to presume on His grace, to sin deliberately while counting on forgiveness, to treat His patience as permission.

The Corinthians tempted Christ by flirting with idolatry, reasoning that their knowledge and freedom permitted what God forbade. They tested whether participation in pagan worship would really bring judgment. Paul warns: Israel tried this, and serpents destroyed them. Don't presume Christ will tolerate what He judged before. Jesus lifted up on the cross (John 3:14) heals those bitten by sin's serpent, but this grace doesn't excuse deliberate rebellion.

Historical Context

The bronze serpent incident (Numbers 21) demonstrated both judgment and grace—God punished rebellion but provided healing for those who looked in faith to the bronze serpent Moses lifted up. Jesus used this as a type of His crucifixion (John 3:14-15). Paul's warning applies to those who abuse grace, treating Christ's sacrifice as license to sin.
