

1 Corinthians 12:15

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

If the foot shall say, Because I am not the hand, I am not of the body; is it therefore not of the body?

Analysis

---

If the foot shall say, Because I am not the hand, I am not of the body; is it therefore not of the body?—Paul personifies body-parts to dramatize gift-envy. The foot's complaint—"I'm not a hand, therefore I don't belong"—exposes faulty logic: difference doesn't equal deficiency. The rhetorical question expects an obvious "No!"—the foot's self-assessment doesn't alter its membership.

This addresses believers who feel inferior because they lack prestigious gifts. The Corinthian who cannot speak in tongues might conclude, "I'm not truly spiritual; I don't really belong." Paul declares such thinking absurd—the Spirit's sovereign gifting determines membership and function, not self-perception or others' evaluation. The foot isn't malfunctioning; it's fulfilling precisely the role the head (Christ) designed. Its value derives not from being a hand but from being a foot—perfectly suited for walking, while the hand cannot.

Historical Context

Lower-class Corinthian Christians, lacking education or oratorical skill, might feel marginalized in worship gatherings dominated by the wealthy and articulate. Paul affirms their indispensable value despite lacking high-status gifts.
