

1 Corinthians 14:27

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

If any man speak in an unknown tongue, let it be by two, or at the most by three, and that by course; and let one interpret.

Analysis

If any man speak in an unknown tongue, let it be by two, or at the most by three, and that by course—Paul regulates tongues: kata dyo ē to pleiston treis (κατὰ δύο ἢ τὸ πλεῖστον τρεῖς, "by two or at most three"), and ana meros (ἀνὰ μέρος, "in turn, one at a time"). And let one interpret (kai heis diermēneuetō, καὶ εἷς διερμηνεύετω, "and let one interpret").

Paul's specificity is striking:

1. limit tongues to 2-3 per service
2. speak sequentially, not simultaneously
3. ensure one person interprets.

These rules prioritize order and intelligibility. Tongues aren't forbidden, but they're carefully regulated to serve edification. The present imperative diermēneuetō ("let him interpret") makes interpretation non-negotiable.

Historical Context

This suggests Corinthian worship featured multiple simultaneous tongues-speakers with no interpretation—chaos. Paul imposes order: few speakers, sequential turns, mandatory interpretation.

Study Questions

1. Why does Paul limit tongues to 2-3 per service?
2. What's the significance of speaking 'by course' (in turn) rather than simultaneously?
3. How do these regulations serve the edification principle?
