

1 Corinthians 16:14

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Let all your things be done with charity.

Analysis

Let all your things be done with charity—Panta hymōn en agapē ginesthō (πάντα ὑμῶν ἐν ἀγάπῃ γινέσθω, "let all your things be done in love"). After 13 chapters addressing Corinthian failures and four imperatives demanding strength (v. 13), Paul grounds everything in agapē (ἀγάπη)—the self-giving, others-centered love defined in chapter 13. Without agape, prophecy, tongues, knowledge, and faith amount to nothing (13:1-3).

This single verse encapsulates the entire letter's message. Every Corinthian problem—divisions, litigation, sexual immorality, idol feasts, worship chaos, resurrection denial—stemmed from failure to love. Agapē fulfills the law (Romans 13:10), produces Spirit fruit (Galatians 5:22), and marks authentic Christianity (John 13:35). Paul's love chapter (13) sits at the letter's center; this command forms its application.

Historical Context

First-century Corinth, notorious for sexual immorality, economic stratification, and competitive honor culture, epitomized the opposite of agape. Corinthian Christians imported worldly values into the church—favoring elites, despising the poor at the Lord's Supper, pursuing status through spiritual gifts. Paul's radical counter-cultural ethic insisted that love, not status or power or knowledge, defines Christian community.
