

1 Corinthians 3:2

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

I have fed you with milk, and not with meat: for hitherto ye were not able to bear it, neither yet now are ye able.

Analysis

---

I have fed you with milk, and not with meat (γάλα... οὐ βρῶμα, gala... ou brōma)—Paul employs a nursing metaphor common in ancient pedagogy. Gala represents elementary gospel truths (repentance, faith, baptism), while brōma (solid food) denotes deeper doctrinal instruction about Christ's supremacy, church order, and eschatology. For hitherto ye were not able to bear it, neither yet now are ye able—their ongoing inability reveals arrested development.

This incapacity wasn't intellectual but moral and spiritual. The Corinthians prided themselves on wisdom and eloquence (1:5, 8:1) yet lacked the character to handle weightier truth. Knowledge without love produces arrogance (8:1); doctrine divorced from holiness breeds heresy. The author of Hebrews similarly rebuked believers who should have been teachers but still needed elementary instruction (Hebrews 5:12). Spiritual maturity requires both time and sanctification—doctrinal understanding wedded to Christlike character.

Historical Context

Paul had spent 18 months in Corinth founding the church (Acts 18:11), followed by years of absence during which Apollos ministered there (Acts 18:27-19:1). Despite extensive teaching from two gifted leaders, the congregation remained spiritually infantile, unable to digest theological meat. Their cultural environment—Greek intellectualism combined with moral libertinism—made sanctification particularly challenging.

Study Questions

1. Does your spiritual diet consist primarily of 'milk' (basic, comfortable truths) or 'meat' (challenging doctrines that require maturity)?
2. What character deficiencies might prevent you from handling deeper biblical truth—pride, impatience, lack of love?
3. How does the Corinthian example warn against pursuing knowledge without pursuing holiness?
