

1 Corinthians 4:1

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Let a man so account of us, as of the ministers of Christ, and stewards of the mysteries of God.

Analysis

Let a man so account of us, as of the ministers of Christ, and stewards of the mysteries of God. Paul uses huperetes (ὑπηρέτης, "minister/servant") and oikonomos (οἰκονόμος, "steward/manager") to define apostolic ministry. The first term originally meant an under-rower on a galley—one who serves beneath authority. The second refers to a household manager entrusted with his master's resources. Together they emphasize subordination and accountability rather than celebrity status.

The mysteries of God (mysteria tou Theou, μυστήρια τοῦ Θεοῦ) are the once-hidden revelations now disclosed in Christ—God's eternal plan of redemption through a crucified Messiah (2:7). Paul's role is not to invent wisdom but to faithfully dispense divine truth already revealed. This counters the Corinthian tendency to treat teachers as competing philosophers with original systems, when apostles are merely commissioned heralds of one gospel.

Historical Context

Written around AD 55 from Ephesus, this letter addresses a fractured church enamored with human wisdom and rhetorical skill (chapters 1-4). Corinth was a cosmopolitan commercial hub where itinerant philosophers gathered followers. The Corinthians imported this competitive dynamic into the church, forming personality cults around Paul, Apollos, and Cephas (1:12). Paul's household-servant imagery would resonate in a Roman context where stewards managed estates but owned nothing themselves.

Study Questions

1. How does viewing ministry as stewardship rather than ownership change your attitude toward spiritual gifts and teaching roles?
2. What 'mysteries of God' have you been entrusted to faithfully communicate to others in your sphere of influence?
3. In what ways might you be treating Christian teachers as celebrities rather than servants under Christ's authority?
