

1 Corinthians 4:3

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

But with me it is a very small thing that I should be judged of you, or of man's judgment: yea, I judge not mine own self.

Analysis

But with me it is a very small thing that I should be judged of you, or of man's judgment. The phrase eis elachiston (εἰς ἐλάχιστον, "into smallest thing") indicates utter insignificance. Paul treats human verdict—anthropines hemeras (ἀνθρωπίνης ἡμέρας, literally "man's day")—as trivial compared to divine assessment. The legal terminology continues: anakrino (ἀνακρίνω, "examine/judge") was used for preliminary hearings before a trial.

Yea, I judge not mine own self. Paul refuses even self-examination as the final court. This isn't license for carelessness but recognition that human perspective—even one's own conscience—lacks ultimate authority. The conscience can be misinformed or seared (1 Tim 4:2). Only God's omniscient scrutiny reveals true motives and the full measure of faithfulness. Paul's liberation from human opinion (including his own self-assessment) frees him for radical obedience.

Historical Context

The forensic language reflects Corinthian obsession with evaluating and ranking teachers. As a sophisticated Greek city with Roman legal infrastructure, Corinth valued rhetorical contests and public judgments. Paul's indifference to such tribunals was countercultural. He faces his accusers' verdict with equanimity because he answers to a higher court—the bema (judgment seat) of Christ (2 Cor 5:10).
