

1 Corinthians 5:11

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

But now I have written unto you not to keep company, if any man that is called a brother be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner; with such an one no not to eat.

Analysis

But now I have written unto you not to keep company—Paul reinforces his instruction with heightened clarity. The prohibition is specific: if any man that is called a brother (ἐάν τις ἀδελφὸς ὀνομαζόμενος)—someone claiming Christian identity, a church member in name. The present participle onomazomenos ("being called, named") emphasizes professed, not proven, faith. The list follows: be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner—loidoros ("railer") is verbally abusive, reviling; methusos ("drunkard") is a habitual drunk.

With such an one no not to eat—the double negative (οὐδὲ συνεσθῆιν) is emphatic: "not even to eat." Shared meals signified fellowship and acceptance; refusing table fellowship was a severe statement. The principle is clear: the church maintains higher standards for those claiming Christ's name than for unbelievers. Persistent, unrepentant sin by professing Christians requires loving separation to protect the church's witness and create space for repentance. This isn't hatred but hope—severe mercy seeking restoration.

Historical Context

In Jewish and early Christian practice, shared meals were sacred acts of fellowship (koinonia). The early church's agape feasts and Lord's Supper were central to community life (Acts 2:42; 1 Cor 11:17-34). Refusing to eat with someone was tantamount to excommunication, treating them as outside the covenant community, similar to Jesus being criticized for eating with tax collectors and sinners (Luke 5:30).
