

1 Corinthians 5:8

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Therefore let us keep the feast, not with old leaven, neither with the leaven of malice and wickedness; but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth.

Analysis

Therefore let us keep the feast (ὥστε ἐορτάζωμεν)—Paul extends the Passover imagery to the Christian life as an ongoing festival. The present subjunctive heortazomen suggests continuous celebration. The entire Christian life is a feast of deliverance from sin's slavery, requiring ongoing vigilance against sin's re-entry. Not with old leaven, neither with the leaven of malice and wickedness—kakia ("malice") is ill will or viciousness; poneria ("wickedness") is active evil or depravity.

But with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth—eilikrineia ("sincerity") means purity, unmixed motives, transparency that withstands scrutiny (literally "judged by sunlight"). Aletheia ("truth") is reality, genuineness, integrity. Christian celebration isn't mere ritual but life characterized by moral purity and truthfulness. The church's holiness must be internal (sincerity) and external (truth), rejecting both hidden corruption and public compromise. This is gospel-shaped living—transformed by Christ's sacrifice into communities of authentic holiness.

Historical Context

The Feast of Unleavened Bread immediately followed Passover, lasting seven days (Ex. 12:15-20). Leaven symbolized Egypt's corruption from which Israel was delivered. For Paul, the Christian life is a perpetual feast celebrating deliverance from sin through Christ, requiring ongoing separation from moral corruption.
