

1 Corinthians 6:18

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Flee fornication. Every sin that a man doeth is without the body; but he that committeth fornication sinneth against his own body.

Analysis

Flee fornication. Pheugete tēn porneian (φεύγετε τὴν πορνείαν)—urgent, present imperative. Pheugō means 'run away, escape' (like Joseph from Potiphar's wife, Genesis 39:12). Don't debate, rationalize, or linger—flee! Porneia encompasses all sexual immorality outside marriage. Then Paul's unique claim: Every sin that a man doeth is without the body; but he that committeth fornication sinneth against his own body.

This is grammatically tricky. Paul likely quotes another Corinthian slogan ('every sin is outside the body'), then refutes it: ho de porneuōn eis to idion sōma hamartanei (ὁ δὲ πορνεύων εἰς τὸ ἴδιον σῶμα ἁμαρτάνει, 'but the fornicator sins into his own body'). Eis ('into') suggests internal violation—sexual sin uniquely corrupts the body's integrity because it involves the body as subject, not just instrument. Other sins (theft, drunkenness) involve the body as tool; fornication involves the body as object, profaning its purpose as Christ's member and the Spirit's temple.

Historical Context

Ancient Corinthians distinguished sins: theft and fraud were serious (impacting property), but sexual license was trivial recreation. Paul inverts this: sexual sin uniquely violates the body's sacred purpose. His theology anticipates modern insights: sexual trauma affects persons more deeply than other violations because sex engages the whole person—body, soul, emotions. 'Flee' was countercultural: Corinthian men boasted sexual exploits; Paul calls them to run like Joseph.

Study Questions

1. What situations, relationships, or media consumption require you to 'flee' rather than attempt to manage or resist gradually?
2. How does viewing sexual sin as uniquely self-destructive (sinning 'into' your own body) motivate purity without adding shame?
3. What accountability structures can help you flee temptation swiftly rather than lingering in compromising situations?
