

1 Corinthians 6:2

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Do ye not know that the saints shall judge the world? and if the world shall be judged by you, are ye unworthy to judge the smallest matters?

Analysis

Do ye not know that the saints shall judge the world? Paul grounds church discipline in eschatology. Krinō (κρίνω, 'judge') appears throughout verses 1-6—the saints' future role as co-judges with Christ (Matthew 19:28, Revelation 20:4) makes present incompetence absurd. If believers will adjudicate cosmic matters, are they really unworthy to judge the smallest matters (kritērion elachistōn, κριτήριον ἐλαχίστων)?

The logic is a fortiori: greater authority assumes lesser competence. Jewish apocalyptic tradition envisioned the righteous judging nations (Wisdom 3:8, Daniel 7:22); Paul applies this to church disputes. The Corinthians' failure reveals not lack of wisdom but refusal to embrace their identity—they're playing citizens of Corinth when they're already citizens of heaven.

Historical Context

Jewish courts (beth din) handled internal disputes to avoid Roman entanglement. Paul assumes the church should function similarly as a distinct polis (political community) with its own jurisprudence. The Corinthians' reliance on secular courts showed they valued Roman citizenship over kingdom citizenship—ironic in a church obsessed with spiritual status (4:8: 'already you reign as kings!').

1. How does your future role in Christ's kingdom (judging the world and angels) reshape your view of present conflicts?
2. What 'smallest matters' do you escalate because you've forgotten your eternal identity and authority?
3. How can church leaders cultivate discernment so believers trust internal resolution over external litigation?
