

1 Corinthians 8:1

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Now as touching things offered unto idols, we know that we all have knowledge. Knowledge puffeth up, but charity edifieth.

Analysis

Now as touching things offered unto idols (περὶ δὲ τῶν εἰδωλοθύτων, peri de ton eidolothytōn)—Paul addresses meat sacrificed in pagan temples, a volatile issue in cosmopolitan Corinth. His pastoral response pivots on a crucial contrast: Knowledge puffeth up, but charity edifieth (ἢ γνῶσις φυσιοῖ, ἢ δὲ ἀγάπη οἰκοδομεῖ). The verb physioi (φυσιοῖ, "inflates, puffs up") depicts pride as spiritual bloating, while oikodomei (οἰκοδομεῖ, "builds up, edifies") uses architectural imagery—love constructs, knowledge merely inflates.

The Corinthians prided themselves on theological sophistication ("we all have knowledge"), but Paul subordinates gnosis (knowledge) to agape (self-sacrificing love). This becomes the interpretive key for chapters 8-10: intellectual correctness without pastoral sensitivity destroys rather than edifies the church. The "strong" believer who flaunts liberty wounds the "weak" brother—making orthodoxy an instrument of harm rather than help.

Historical Context

In first-century Corinth, virtually all meat sold in the macellum (public market) came from animals sacrificed in pagan temples. Temple rituals provided the city's meat supply, creating a conscience crisis: could Christians eat such meat? The "strong" argued idols were nonentities (8:4); the "weak" feared spiritual contamination. Social meals at temples (8:10) complicated matters further—declining invitations meant social ostracism.

Study Questions

1. Where do you prioritize being "right" over being loving—using theological knowledge as a weapon rather than a tool for building up?
2. How does Paul's "knowledge puffs up, love builds up" challenge evangelical culture that prizes doctrinal precision over pastoral sensitivity?
3. In what areas might your Christian liberty become a stumbling block to weaker believers?
