

1 Corinthians 9:14

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel.

Analysis

Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel. Paul's climactic argument: Jesus Himself commanded that gospel preachers be supported by those who receive the gospel. The phrase "the Lord ordained" (Greek diatassō, διατάσσω, "appointed, decreed") indicates authoritative decree. Paul likely alludes to Luke 10:7 ("the laborer is worthy of his hire") and Matthew 10:10, where Jesus instructed missionaries to accept hospitality and provisions.

"Live of the gospel" means deriving sustenance from gospel ministry, not from secular work. This is divine ordinance, not human custom. God designed a system where spiritual service yields material support, reflecting covenantal reciprocity. Yet Paul will immediately refuse this right (v. 15), demonstrating that even dominical commands can be voluntarily surrendered for greater gospel advance. Paul obeys the spirit (ministers deserve support) while renouncing the letter (I won't take it) to remove obstacles and model Christlike sacrifice.

Historical Context

Jesus sent out the Twelve and the Seventy with instructions to accept food and lodging from those who received their message (Matt 10:5-15; Luke 10:1-12). This established a pattern: gospel workers depend on gospel recipients for material needs. The early church continued this practice (Acts 6:1-6; Phil 4:10-20; 3 John 5-8). Paul affirms the principle even while personally declining its benefit.

Study Questions

1. How does Jesus' own teaching (Luke 10:7) establish ministerial support as divine ordinance, not optional?
2. Why does Paul assert this command so strongly (v. 14) if he intends to refuse it (v. 15)?
3. How does "living of the gospel" protect ministers from worldly entanglements (2 Tim 2:4)?
