

1 Corinthians 9:17

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

For if I do this thing willingly, I have a reward: but if against my will, a dispensation of the gospel is committed unto me.

Analysis

For if I do this thing willingly, I have a reward: If Paul preached voluntarily—a freely chosen profession rather than divine compulsion—he would deserve the reward of material support (the misthos, μισθός, "wage" of v. 18). But Paul does not preach willingly in that sense; he preaches under apostolic commission. But if against my will, a dispensation of the gospel is committed unto me. The Greek oikonomia (οἰκονομία, "stewardship, administration") denotes management of someone else's household or estate.

Paul is a steward, not an owner—entrusted with the gospel treasury but not free to dispose of it as he pleases. Like Joseph managing Potiphar's house or a slave managing a master's affairs, Paul must faithfully discharge his commission whether he feels like it or not. This removes personal glory from preaching itself. His reward (v. 18) comes not from preaching (that is mere duty) but from the manner of preaching: freely, without financial burden on new converts.

Historical Context

Greek oikonomia referred to household management, especially by a trusted slave who oversaw the master's estate. This steward had authority but no ownership—he managed resources on behalf of another. Paul uses this metaphor to describe his apostolic calling: God entrusted him with the gospel (1 Thess 2:4), and Paul must distribute it faithfully. Unfaithfulness means divine judgment (1 Cor 4:1-5).

Study Questions

1. How does viewing ministry as stewardship (not ownership) protect against pride and abuse?
2. What is the difference between voluntary service (deserving reward) and compulsory duty (fulfilling obligation)?
3. How does Paul's "unwilling" preaching (divine compulsion) paradoxically result in greater devotion than voluntary service?
