

1 Corinthians 9:24

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Know ye not that they which run in a race run all, but one receiveth the prize? So run, that ye may obtain.

Analysis

---

Know ye not that they which run in a race run all, but one receiveth the prize? Paul shifts to athletic metaphors drawn from the Isthmian Games held near Corinth every two years. Greek stadion (στάδιον, "race, running track") was a footrace of about 200 yards. All runners compete, but only one wins the victor's crown. Paul is not teaching salvation by works or competition among believers—he is emphasizing earnestness, focus, and self-discipline.

So run, that ye may obtain. The imperative "run" (Greek trechō, τρέχω) calls for purposeful effort. The Christian life is not passive but active, not aimless wandering but directed pursuit. Paul urges the Corinthians to run with the same intensity as athletes striving for a crown. The goal is not defeating other believers but obtaining the prize—faithfulness rewarded, not salvation earned. Paul uses athletic imagery to illustrate disciplined Christian living, not to introduce works-righteousness.

Historical Context

The Isthmian Games, held in honor of Poseidon near Corinth, were second only to the Olympics in prestige. Events included footraces, wrestling, boxing, and chariot racing. Winners received a pine wreath (later a celery crown). Corinthians were intimately familiar with athletic training, discipline, and competition—making Paul's metaphor immediately powerful. The city's identity was shaped by these games, held every two years.

Study Questions

1. How does Paul use athletic competition to illustrate Christian faithfulness without teaching works-salvation?
2. What does it mean to "run" the Christian life with purpose and discipline?
3. How does the Isthmian Games context make this metaphor especially vivid for Corinthian readers?
