

1 Corinthians 9:6

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Or I only and Barnabas, have not we power to forbear working?

Analysis

Or I only and Barnabas, have not we power to forbear working? Paul names his missionary partner Barnabas (Acts 13-14), noting that both of them uniquely continued to work manual labor rather than living exclusively from gospel ministry. The Greek mē ergazesthai (μὴ ἐργάζεσθαι, "to not work") means ceasing secular employment to devote full time to preaching. Other apostles exercised this right; Paul and Barnabas did not.

The rhetorical question expects the answer "Yes, we have that right"—yet Paul and Barnabas voluntarily surrendered it. Why? Paul will explain (v. 12, 18): to remove any obstacle to the gospel, to avoid being a financial burden, and to model self-sacrificial ministry. This is the chapter's hinge: Paul asserts his rights (v. 4-14) only to renounce them (v. 15-18), demonstrating that Christian freedom is most gloriously displayed when willingly limited for love of others.

Historical Context

Barnabas, Paul's early missionary companion, was a Levite from Cyprus (Acts 4:36) who sold property to support the Jerusalem church. He partnered with Paul on the first missionary journey (Acts 13-14) and shared Paul's conviction that gospel ministry should not financially burden new converts. Their tent-making (Acts 18:3) was countercultural in a society where teachers expected patronage, but it protected the gospel from accusations of greed.

Study Questions

1. Why do Paul and Barnabas stand out among apostles for continuing manual labor?
2. How does self-support in ministry both honor the gospel and protect it from suspicion?
3. When is it appropriate for ministers to work secularly, and when should churches provide full support?
