

1 John 3:11

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

For this is the message that ye heard from the beginning, that we should love one another.

Analysis

For this is the message that ye heard from the beginning, that we should love one another. John appeals to apostolic teaching as the foundation for brotherly love. "The message that ye heard from the beginning" (hē aggelia hēn ēkousate ap' archēs) refers to the gospel and Jesus's foundational commands delivered from Christianity's inception. "From the beginning" echoes 1:1 and 2:7—this isn't novel teaching but original apostolic doctrine.

"That we should love one another" (hina agapōmen allēlous) uses agapaō, the self-sacrificial love demonstrated supremely in Christ. This isn't sentimental affection but costly commitment to others' good. The present subjunctive indicates continuous action—ongoing, habitual love. "One another" (allēlous) is reciprocal—mutual love within the Christian community.

This command wasn't peripheral but central to Christian identity. Jesus called it His new commandment (John 13:34-35) and the mark by which the world would recognize His disciples. Paul echoed this (Romans 13:8-10, Galatians 5:14). Love fulfills the law and evidences the Spirit's work. John's insistence that this message was heard "from the beginning" counters false teachers who promoted novel doctrines divorced from apostolic teaching and who separated theology from ethics, knowledge from love.

Historical Context

Jesus gave the "new commandment" to love one another on the night before His crucifixion (John 13:34). Though loving neighbors was commanded in the Old Testament (Leviticus 19:18), Jesus's command was new in its foundation ("as I have loved you"), its community (the church), and its standard (Christ's sacrificial death). The apostles consistently taught this from Christianity's earliest days.

First-century Greco-Roman culture valued honor, status, and patron-client relationships. Christian agape love was revolutionary—loving equals, not seeking advantage, sacrificing for others' good without expecting return. This radical ethic distinguished Christians from surrounding culture and authenticated their message. When Gnostic teachers promoted esoteric knowledge over practical love, John recalled believers to foundational apostolic teaching.

Study Questions

1. How does viewing love for other Christians as a command 'from the beginning' (not optional extra) change your priorities?
2. What's the difference between sentimental feelings and the biblical love (agape) commanded here?
3. How can you tell whether you're loving fellow believers according to this command or merely maintaining superficial friendliness?
