

1 John 3:17

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

But whoso hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?

Analysis

But whoso hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him? John provides a practical test of love's genuineness. "Whoso hath this world's good" (hos d' an echē ton bion tou kosmou)—bios (βίος) means life resources, material possessions necessary for living. This addresses those with means, not destitute believers unable to help others.

"And seeth his brother have need" (kai theōrē ton adelphon autou chreian echonta)—the present tense indicates awareness of ongoing need. "And shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him" (kai kleisē ta splagchna autou ap' autou)—splagchna (σπλάγχνα) literally means intestines or internal organs, metaphorically the seat of emotions and compassion. To shut one's bowels is to close one's heart, refusing to feel or act on compassion.

"How dwelleth the love of God in him?" (pōs hē agapē tou theou menei en autō)—the rhetorical question expects the answer "It doesn't." The phrase "love of God" could mean either love for God or God's love dwelling in the person; likely both are implied. One who refuses to help needy brothers demonstrates that neither love for God nor God's love abides within. This echoes James 2:15-16—faith without works is dead. Genuine love produces tangible actions, especially meeting fellow believers' physical needs.

Historical Context

The early church practiced radical generosity. Acts describes believers selling possessions to meet others' needs (Acts 2:44-45, 4:32-37). Paul organized collections from Gentile churches for impoverished Jerusalem believers (Romans 15:26, 2 Corinthians 8-9). This economic sharing demonstrated love's reality and the church's unity across ethnic and geographic boundaries.

The Greco-Roman world had patron-client relationships involving reciprocal obligations, but Christian charity was different—giving without expectation of return, motivated by God's grace, meeting needs regardless of recipients' status. This practical love authenticated the gospel and attracted converts. John's teaching here reflects this early Christian ethic—faith, love, and generosity are inseparable.

Study Questions

1. What specific needs of fellow believers are you currently aware of, and how are you responding with tangible help?
2. How can you tell the difference between wise stewardship and shutting up your compassion toward needy brothers?
3. If the genuineness of God's love in you is evidenced by practical generosity, what does your current giving pattern reveal?
