

1 John 3:8

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

He that committeth sin is of the devil; for the devil sinneth from the beginning. For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil.

Analysis

He that committeth sin is of the devil; for the devil sinneth from the beginning. For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil. John presents sin's ultimate source and Christ's purpose. "He that committeth sin" (ho poiōn tēn hamartian)—again the present participle indicating habitual practice—"is of the devil" (ek tou diabolou estin). This doesn't mean created by Satan but belonging to his family, bearing his character, serving his purposes. Jesus made similar statements in John 8:44 about those who reject Him.

"For the devil sinneth from the beginning" (hoti ho diabolos ap' archēs hamartanei) reveals Satan as the originator of sin in the created order. He sinned before human sin (Isaiah 14:12-15, Ezekiel 28:12-17), and he continues to sin—present tense. Satan's rebellion against God introduced sin into the universe; human sin stems from Satanic temptation and corruption (Genesis 3).

"For this purpose the Son of God was manifested" (eis touto ephanerōthē ho huios tou theou): Christ's incarnation aimed at destroying Satan's works. "Destroy" (lusē, λύση) means to loose, dissolve, or nullify. Through His death and resurrection, Christ destroyed death's power, defeated Satan (Hebrews 2:14), and liberated believers from sin's dominion (Romans 6:14). This destruction continues as the gospel advances and will culminate in Satan's final judgment (Revelation 20:10).

Historical Context

First-century Jewish apocalyptic literature portrayed cosmic conflict between God and Satan, light and darkness (seen in Dead Sea Scrolls). Early Christians understood their conversion as transferring from Satan's kingdom to God's kingdom (Colossians 1:13), from darkness to light (1 Peter 2:9). This wasn't dualism (equal opposing forces) but recognition that Satan temporarily exercises power in this fallen world until Christ's final victory.

The phrase "from the beginning" (ap' archēs) indicates Satan's sin predated human history. Jewish tradition held that Satan fell before creating humanity, explaining the serpent's presence in Eden. John confirms this: Satan sinned first; humans followed. Christ came to undo this catastrophic rebellion and its consequences.

Study Questions

1. How does understanding that habitual sin aligns you with Satan's purposes (not merely breaks rules) intensify sin's seriousness?
2. In what specific ways has Christ destroyed the devil's works in your life, and what works remain to be destroyed?
3. How should awareness of spiritual warfare against Satan affect your daily battle against sin?
