

1 John 4:17

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Herein is our love made perfect, that we may have boldness in the day of judgment: because as he is, so are we in this world.

Analysis

Herein is our love made perfect, that we may have boldness in the day of judgment: because as he is, so are we in this world. John connects perfected love with confident anticipation of judgment. "Herein is our love made perfect" (en toutō teteleiōtai hē agapē meth' hēmōn)—love reaches its goal or completion "with us" (variant readings have "in us" or "among us"). The perfect tense indicates completed action with continuing state. God's love achieves its purpose in believers when it produces confident assurance.

"That we may have boldness in the day of judgment" (hina parrēsian echōmen en tē hēmera tēs kriseōs). Parrēsia means confidence, boldness, or freedom of speech—the opposite of cowering fear. "The day of judgment" refers to Christ's return and final judgment when all accounts are settled. Believers can face this day with confidence, not terror, because of Christ's work and love's perfecting in them.

"Because as he is, so are we in this world" (hoti kathōs ekeinos estin kai hēmeis esmen en tō kosmō toutō). The comparison is startling—as Christ is (in His glorified, accepted state before the Father), so are we even now in this world. This refers to our legal standing (justified, accepted in Christ) and our identity (God's beloved children, sharing Christ's status). We are not yet what we shall be (3:2), but our position before God is secure because we're in Christ. This certainty produces boldness regarding judgment—we face it not in our own righteousness but in Christ's.

Historical Context

The "day of judgment" was central to Jewish and Christian eschatology. Old Testament prophets warned of the Day of the Lord when God would judge the nations and vindicate His people. Jesus taught extensively about final judgment (Matthew 25:31-46, John 5:28-29). This wasn't abstract theology but practical warning and comfort—warning to unbelievers to flee coming wrath, comfort to believers that they will be vindicated.

The Reformation recovery of justification by faith alone made sense of John's statement. If we're justified by works, judgment day brings terror—who has done enough? But if we're justified by faith in Christ, judgment brings vindication—Christ's righteousness covers us. Our status before God matches Christ's status ("as he is, so are we") because we're united to Him. This produces the boldness John describes.

Study Questions

1. How does understanding your current status before God (as Christ is, so are you) affect your anticipation of judgment day?
2. What's the relationship between love being perfected in you and having boldness in judgment—why does one produce the other?
3. Do you currently face the prospect of Christ's return and final judgment with boldness or fear, and why?
