

1 Peter 3:5

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

For after this manner in the old time the holy women also, who trusted in God, adorned themselves, being in subjection unto their own husbands:

Analysis

Peter appeals to holy women of Old Testament as examples. "For after this manner in the old time the holy women also, who trusted in God, adorned themselves" (houtōs gar pote kai hai hagiai gynaikeis hai elpizousai eis theon ekosmoun heautas). These godly women focused on internal beauty, not external adornment. Their defining characteristic: "trusted in God" (elpizousai eis theon)—hope/trust placed in God, not appearance, wealth, or human approval. The behavior: "being in subjection unto their own husbands" (hypotassomenai tois idiois andrasin)—voluntary submission characterized Old Testament godly women. This wasn't cultural accommodation but biblical pattern.

Historical Context

Peter roots New Testament instruction in Old Testament precedent, showing continuity. The patriarchal narratives present women like Sarah as examples of faith and godly character. This challenged both Jewish readers (who might dismiss wife's role) and Gentile converts (unfamiliar with biblical models). Peter emphasizes these women's trust in God as foundation for their conduct—submission flowed from faith, not fear or cultural expectation. Early church taught that biblical womanhood transcends culture, rooted in creation order and redemptive history.

Study Questions

1. How does 'trusting in God' (rather than appearance or human approval) shape priorities for women and men?
2. What does it mean that biblical patterns of relationship transcend cultural accommodation?
