

1 Peter 4:6

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

For for this cause was the gospel preached also to them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit.

Analysis

Peter explains gospel preaching to the dead. "For for this cause was the gospel preached also to them that are dead" (eis touto gar kai nekrois euēgelisthē). "Them that are dead" (nekrois) likely refers to believers now deceased who heard gospel while alive. The purpose: "that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit" (hina krithōsin men kata anthrōpous sarki zōsin de kata theon pneumatī). They were "judged according to men in flesh"—suffered persecution/martyrdom judged by humans. But "live according to God in spirit"—despite physical death, they live spiritually with God. Gospel preached to them secured eternal life despite earthly death.

Historical Context

This difficult verse generated multiple interpretations. Most likely: gospel was preached to people now dead (believers who died, especially martyrs). Though judged/killed by humans physically, they live eternally with God spiritually. This encouraged living believers—deceased Christian loved ones aren't lost but alive with God despite physical death. Alternative view links to 3:19, seeing Christ preaching to Old Testament dead. Either way, verse affirms gospel's power extends beyond physical death—those who believe live eternally despite earthly death. Early church comforted bereaved believers with resurrection hope—death doesn't end existence for Christians but transitions to life with God.
