

1 Samuel 23:26

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And Saul went on this side of the mountain, and David and his men on that side of the mountain: and David made haste to get away for fear of Saul; for Saul and his men compassed David and his men round about to take them.

Analysis

And Saul went on this side of the mountain, and David and his men on that side of the mountain: and David made haste to get away for fear of Saul; for Saul and his men compassed David and his men round about to take them.

The tension reaches its climax. The Hebrew description of opposing sides of the mountain creates vivid imagery—hunter and prey separated only by terrain. David's 'haste' (Hebrew 'bahel') indicates urgent, fearful movement. The phrase 'compassed round about' (Hebrew 'otrim') describes encirclement—Saul's forces were closing in. For the first time, escape seemed impossible. The Hebrew construction emphasizes the apparent hopelessness: David was surrounded, outnumbered, and out of options. Yet this moment of maximum danger would reveal God's deliverance most dramatically. Human extremity creates space for divine intervention.

Historical Context

Encirclement tactics were standard for capturing fugitives in mountainous terrain. Saul's larger force could spread to cover escape routes. David's position appeared strategically hopeless—surrounded in wilderness with no apparent means of escape.
