

1 Samuel 8:22

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And the LORD said to Samuel, Hearken unto their voice, and make them a king. And Samuel said unto the men of Israel, Go ye every man unto his city.

Analysis

And the LORD said to Samuel, Hearken unto their voice, and make them a king. And Samuel said unto the men of Israel, Go ye every man unto his city.

God's final response reveals the mystery of divine sovereignty operating through human freedom. The repeated command "hearken unto their voice" (now the third time—verses 7, 9, 22) grants the people's request while neither approving nor endorsing it. God permits what He does not prefer, allowing Israel to experience the consequences of their choice. This represents what theologians call God's "permissive will"—distinct from His "perfect will" but still within His sovereign plan. Remarkably, the phrase "make them a king" uses the same Hebrew verb ("malak") that could mean "cause to reign"—God remains the one who ultimately establishes kings (Daniel 2:21). Samuel's dismissal, "Go every man unto his city," postpones the selection process, giving space before irreversible action. The narrative thus shows God working redemptively even through Israel's rebellion—the monarchy they wrongly demanded will eventually produce the Davidic covenant and the messianic hope that culminates in Christ, the true King.

Historical Context

The dismissal to their cities suggests a waiting period before king-making, perhaps allowing for reflection or practical preparations. The actual selection of Saul occurs in chapter 9-10 through a combination of providential encounter and public lot-casting. God's accommodation of the request while maintaining ultimate sovereignty reflects His consistent pattern throughout Israel's history.
