

1 Samuel 9:22

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And Samuel took Saul and his servant, and brought them into the parlour, and made them sit in the chiefest place among them that were bidden, which were about thirty persons.

Analysis

And Samuel took Saul and his servant, and brought them into the parlour, and made them sit in the chiefest place among them that were bidden, which were about thirty persons.

Samuel's actions speak louder than words as he physically elevates Saul and even his servant to the 'chiefest place' (rosh, literally 'head') among the thirty invited guests. This public honor before the assembled community signals Saul's new status without explicit announcement. The 'parlour' (lishkah) was a hall or chamber associated with the sanctuary, used for sacrificial meals and sacred gatherings. The inclusion of Saul's servant in this honor demonstrates grace extending beyond the chosen individual to his household, foreshadowing how the king's blessing would affect his entire family and nation. The number thirty suggests a significant gathering of community leaders, making Saul's sudden prominence all the more remarkable. This public seating arrangement prepared the community to accept Saul's coming revelation as king.

Historical Context

The lishkah was a chamber attached to sacred sites, used for storing offerings and hosting sacred meals. Similar structures have been identified archaeologically at various Israelite sites. The number thirty was often associated with official delegations or representative groups in ancient Israel (cf. Judges 14:11). Seating position indicated social rank, with the 'head' position reserved for the most honored guest.
