

1 Thessalonians 1:3

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Remembering without ceasing your work of faith, and labour of love, and patience of hope in our Lord Jesus Christ, in the sight of God and our Father;

Analysis

Remembering without ceasing your work of faith, and labour of love, and patience of hope in our Lord Jesus Christ—this verse introduces Paul's 'faith-hope-love' triad (also 1 Cor 13:13; Col 1:4-5), here with distinctive emphases. Each virtue produces action: ergon tēs pisteōs (ἔργον τῆς πίστεως, 'work produced by faith'), kopos tēs agapēs (κόπος τῆς ἀγάπης, 'toil produced by love'), and hypomonē tēs elpídos (ὑπομονὴ τῆς ἐλπίδος, 'endurance produced by hope'). Faith works, love toils to exhaustion, hope endures.

In the sight of God and our Father (emprosthen tou Theou kai Patros hēmōn, ἔμπροσθεν τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ Πατρὸς ἡμῶν)—their virtues are exercised coram Deo, 'before the face of God.' The Thessalonians' faith wasn't theoretical but active in works (James 2:17); their love wasn't sentimental but costly (kopos implies wearying labor); their hope wasn't passive but produced perseverance under persecution. This trinity of graces flows from union with Christ—notice 'in our Lord Jesus Christ,' the source and sphere of all Christian virtue.

Historical Context

The Thessalonians demonstrated these virtues despite brutal persecution. After Paul left, local Jews and thugs had attacked Jason's house, dragging believers before city authorities with charges of treason against Caesar (Acts 17:5-9). Yet their faith continued producing works, their love kept laboring despite cost, and their hope in Christ's return sustained endurance. This real-world testing proved the genuineness of their conversion from idols (1:9).

Study Questions

1. How does each element of the faith-hope-love triad produce specific action in your life rather than remaining abstract belief?
2. What 'labour of love' in your life has been costly enough to qualify as kopos (toiling to exhaustion)?
3. How does living 'in the sight of God our Father' change your motivation for perseverance compared to human recognition?
