

1 Thessalonians 4:10

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And indeed ye do it toward all the brethren which are in all Macedonia: but we beseech you, brethren, that ye increase more and more;

Analysis

And indeed ye do it toward all the brethren which are in all Macedonia: but we beseech you, brethren, that ye increase more and more—kai gar poieite auto eis pantas tous adelphous tous en holē tē Makedonia. parakaloumen de hymas, adelphoi, perisseuein mallon (καὶ γὰρ ποιεῖτε αὐτὸ εἰς πάντας τοὺς ἀδελφοὺς τοὺς ἐν ὅλῃ τῇ Μακεδονίᾳ. παρακαλοῦμεν δὲ ὑμᾶς, ἀδελφοί, περισσεύειν μᾶλλον). The Thessalonians' love extended beyond their local church to all the brethren in all Macedonia—believers in Philippi, Berea, and other Macedonian cities. This regional love demonstrated authentic Christianity transcending local congregationalism. Yet even exemplary love requires growth: perisseuein mallon (περισσεύειν μᾶλλον, 'to abound more and more').

Paul's pattern repeats: affirmation ('ye do it') plus exhortation ('increase more and more'). This balance prevents both complacency (resting on present attainment) and discouragement (feeling nothing is ever enough). Love should continually increase—there's no ceiling to growth in grace. The phrase 'increase more and more' echoes 3:12 (love abounding) and 4:1 (pleasing God abundantly), establishing progressive sanctification as Christian life's pattern. Believers never 'arrive' but press toward the goal (Phil 3:12-14), always growing in love, faith, and holiness.

Historical Context

The Thessalonians' love for believers throughout Macedonia was remarkable given their own poverty and persecution. They apparently shared resources with other churches, hosted traveling believers, and maintained fellowship despite distances and difficulties. Paul later commended Macedonian churches (including Thessalonica) for extraordinary generosity: 'their deep poverty abounded unto the riches of their liberality... beyond their power' (2 Cor 8:2-3). This sacrificial love proved their faith's authenticity and established a model for churches throughout history.

Study Questions

1. How does your love extend beyond your local congregation to believers regionally and globally?
2. What specific actions demonstrate that your love is 'increasing more and more' rather than static or declining?
3. How do you balance affirmation for present growth with exhortation toward continued increase without creating either complacency or discouragement?
