

1 Timothy 4:11

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

These things command and teach.

Analysis

---

These things command and teach (Παράγγελλε ταῦτα καὶ δίδασκε, Parangelle tauta kai didaske)—'command these things and teach them.' Parangellō is a military term meaning to order, charge, instruct authoritatively. Didaskō means to teach, instruct, explain. Timothy must both command with authority and teach with clarity.

Paul's instructions aren't suggestions or personal opinions—they carry apostolic authority. Timothy must not timidly propose but boldly declare these truths about godliness, spiritual training, and the gospel. The church needs both authoritative proclamation (command) and patient explanation (teach)—directive leadership and instructional ministry.

This brief verse reinforces Timothy's apostolic mandate. Despite opposition from false teachers and his own youth (4:12), Timothy must speak with conviction. The message isn't his invention but apostolic tradition to be faithfully transmitted.

Historical Context

Timothy faced significant opposition in Ephesus from influential false teachers (1:3-7). His youth and perhaps timid temperament (2 Timothy 1:7-8) made bold proclamation difficult. Paul reinforces Timothy's authority—he speaks not on his own behalf but with apostolic backing. The church must recognize and submit to Timothy's Christ-given authority to teach sound doctrine.

Study Questions

1. How can pastors balance authoritative proclamation with humble teaching?
2. Why does faithful ministry require both commanding (with authority) and teaching (with patience)?
3. What gives ministers today the authority to 'command' churches in matters of doctrine and practice?
