

1 Timothy 6:7

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

For we brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out.

Analysis

For we brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out (οὐδὲν γὰρ εἰσηγκαμεν εἰς τὸν κόσμον, ὅτι οὐδὲ ἔξενεγκεῖν τι δυνάμεθα, ouden gar eisēnenkamen eis ton kosmon, hoti oude exenenkein ti dynametha)—'we brought nothing into the world, and we cannot take anything out.' This proverbial truth (Job 1:21, Ecclesiastes 5:15) exposes materialism's futility.

We enter life naked and empty; we exit the same way. All earthly accumulation is temporary—wealth, possessions, status all remain behind. This reality should relativize our attachment to material things. We're temporary stewards, not ultimate owners. Investments in eternal realities (relationships, character, kingdom work) endure; material accumulation doesn't.

Paul uses this universal truth to ground his teaching on contentment. If we leave everything behind at death, why obsess over acquiring more? Contentment flows from recognizing life's brevity and eternity's reality. Live with open hands, investing in what lasts forever.

Historical Context

Ancient burial practices made death's finality vivid—wealthy Egyptians tried to take possessions into afterlife, but it didn't work. Jews buried people simply, recognizing we leave everything behind. Paul uses this common knowledge to expose the folly of materialistic pursuit. You can't take it with you, so hold it lightly.
