

2 Corinthians 13:3

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Since ye seek a proof of Christ speaking in me, which to you-ward is not weak, but is mighty in you.

Analysis

---

Since ye seek a proof of Christ speaking in me—The Greek dokimēn (δοκιμήν, "proof/testing") is the crucial term: the Corinthians demand credentials demonstrating apostolic authority. Paul responds that Christ speaking in me is validated not by rhetorical polish but by power: which to you-ward is not weak, but is mighty in you. The paradox: they doubt Paul while their own existence as Christians proves Christ's power through him.

This echoes 1 Corinthians 2:1-5 where Paul rejected "wisdom of words" in favor of "demonstration of the Spirit and power." The Corinthians' demand for dokimē (proof) will boomerang into self-examination (v. 5)—those questioning Paul's authority must first examine their own standing. Christ's "mighty" (dynatei, δυνατεῖ) power among them constitutes the very proof they seek.

Historical Context

Greek rhetoric prized eloquence and philosophical sophistication. Paul's deliberate rejection of such methods (1 Cor 2:1-4) led some Corinthians to question his authority, especially when compared to more polished "super-apostles" (2 Cor 11:5). This cultural collision between Greco-Roman honor values and the cruciform power Paul embodied created ongoing tension.

Study Questions

1. How do we wrongly demand 'proof' of spiritual authority based on worldly credentials rather than spiritual fruit?
2. What does it mean that the Corinthians' own conversion was proof of Christ's power through Paul?
3. How does Christ's power manifest 'not in word but in power' in church leadership today?
