

2 Corinthians 2:13

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

I had no rest in my spirit, because I found not Titus my brother: but taking my leave of them, I went from thence into Macedonia.

Analysis

I had no rest in my spirit, because I found not Titus my brother—The phrase eschēka anesin tō pneumati mou (ἐσχῆκα ἄνεσιν τῷ πνεύματί μου, "I had no rest in my spirit") reveals Paul's inner turmoil. The term anesis (ἄνεσις, "rest, relief, relaxation") suggests Paul was emotionally unable to capitalize on Troas's opportunities. His reference to Titon ton adelphon mou (Τίτον τὸν ἀδελφόν μου, "Titus my brother") emphasizes their close partnership—Titus was the bearer of the severe letter, and Paul anxiously awaited news of Corinth's response.

But taking my leave of them, I went from thence into Macedonia—Paul abandons the open door in Troas to find Titus in Macedonia. This decision reveals authentic humanity—even apostles experience anxiety that affects ministry capacity. Paul's vulnerability here encourages contemporary ministers: spiritual effectiveness requires emotional and relational health. Sometimes the wisest decision is leaving fruitful ministry to resolve relational crisis. Paul eventually found Titus in Macedonia with good news (2 Cor 7:5-7).

Historical Context

Travel in the ancient Mediterranean was slow and uncertain. Titus would have traveled by foot and ship, with no way to send quick updates. Paul's anxiety reflects the practical difficulties of first-century communication. His decision to abandon Troas to find Titus shows how communication limitations shaped apostolic ministry.
