

2 Corinthians 2:6

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Sufficient to such a man is this punishment, which was inflicted of many.

Analysis

Sufficient to such a man is this punishment, which was inflicted of many—

The term epitimia (ἐπιτιμία, "punishment, censure") refers to formal church discipline, and pleionōn (πλειόνων, "of the many") indicates congregational involvement, likely meaning the majority enacted the discipline Paul had demanded. The word hikanon (ἰκανόν, "sufficient") is crucial—Paul declares the punishment adequate and calls for its termination.

This verse provides a biblical pattern for church discipline:

1. corporate involvement, not merely leadership decision
2. clear beginning and ending points
3. restoration as the goal, not perpetual punishment.

The "sufficiency" of the discipline means the offender has demonstrated genuine repentance, fulfilling discipline's redemptive purpose. Continuing punishment beyond repentance would shift from restoration to revenge.

Historical Context

Ancient voluntary associations (guilds, religious societies) commonly practiced exclusion as punishment for violations. Paul adapts this practice but with a distinctly redemptive focus—discipline aims at restoration, not permanent expulsion. This was revolutionary in a culture where honor loss was often irreversible.

Study Questions

1. How does church discipline today often fail to have a clear endpoint?
2. What role should the congregation play in both implementing and ending discipline?
3. How can churches discern when discipline has achieved its redemptive purpose?
