

2 Corinthians 2:9

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

For to this end also did I write, that I might know the proof of you, whether ye be obedient in all things.

Analysis

For to this end also did I write, that I might know the proof of you—The term dokimēn (δοκιμήν, "proof, testing, character") suggests tested authenticity, like metal refined by fire. Paul's severe letter had a secondary purpose beyond addressing specific sin: testing whether the Corinthians would obey apostolic authority. Church discipline reveals congregational character—will they submit to Scripture's demands even when costly?

Whether ye be obedient in all things—The phrase eis panta (εἰς πάντα, "in all things") indicates comprehensive obedience, not selective compliance. The test encompassed both implementing discipline when required and offering restoration when appropriate. Many churches will discipline but refuse to restore; others will tolerate sin to avoid conflict. Full obedience requires both courage to confront and grace to forgive. Paul's test assessed their willingness to obey even when emotionally difficult.

Historical Context

Apostolic authority in the first-century church required demonstrated obedience to apostolic teaching. Paul's letters often include similar tests of compliance (1 Cor 14:37-38, 2 Thess 3:14). This was not arbitrary authoritarianism but recognition that apostolic teaching carried Christ's authority.

Study Questions

1. How do churches today demonstrate selective obedience to Scripture?
2. Why is the willingness to both discipline and restore a test of true obedience?
3. What does Paul's testing of the Corinthians teach about apostolic authority?
