

2 Corinthians 3:10

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

For even that which was made glorious had no glory in this respect, by reason of the glory that excelleth.

Analysis

For even that which was made glorious had no glory in this respect, by reason of the glory that excelleth. Paul employs comparative negation: the old covenant's glory was real, but when compared to the new covenant's glory that excelleth (Greek tēs hyperbalousēs doxēs, τῆς ὑπερβαλλούσης δόξης, literally "the surpassing glory"), it had no glory in this respect (Greek ou dedoxastai en toutō tō merei, οὐ δεδόξασται ἐν τούτῳ τῷ μέρει). This is hyperbolic comparison: the lesser glory pales to insignificance beside the greater.

The Greek verb hyperballō (ὑπερβάλλω) means "to surpass," "exceed," or "transcend"—the same root Paul uses of God's "exceeding" grace (2 Corinthians 9:14) and "exceeding" greatness of power (Ephesians 1:19). The new covenant glory doesn't merely surpass the old by degree but by kind—it is glory of another order entirely. Like the stars that appear to have no light when the sun rises, the Sinaitic glory dims to nothing beside Christ's glory revealed in the gospel.

Historical Context

Paul's rhetoric here would shock Jewish readers who revered the Sinai event as the defining moment of Israel's identity. The giving of the law, accompanied by thunder, lightning, fire, and God's audible voice (Exodus 19-20), represented the pinnacle of divine revelation—until Christ. Paul does not deny the old covenant's glory but relativizes it in light of Christ's coming. Hebrews 1:1-3 makes the same point: God's past speaking through prophets (including Moses) is superseded by His speaking through His Son.
