

2 Corinthians 3:16

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Nevertheless when it shall turn to the Lord, the veil shall be taken away.

Analysis

Nevertheless when it shall turn to the Lord, the veil shall be taken away.

Paul offers hope: the veil is not permanent. When it shall turn (Greek hēnika epistrepsē, ἡνίκα ἐπιστρέψῃ) uses the verb epistrephō (ἐπιστρέφω), meaning "to turn," "return," or "convert"—biblical language for repentance and conversion. The subject it is ambiguous in Greek (no pronoun), possibly referring to Israel collectively, an individual heart, or even Moses symbolically. The ambiguity is intentional: whenever anyone (Jew or Gentile) turns to the Lord (Greek pros Kyrion, πρὸς Κύριον), the veil shall be taken away (Greek periaireitai to kalymma, περιαιρεῖται τὸ κάλυμμα).

Paul alludes to Exodus 34:34: "But when Moses went in before the LORD to speak with him, he took the veil off." Just as Moses removed the veil to enter God's presence, so any person who turns to the Lord (Christ) in repentance has the veil removed, enabling them to perceive spiritual truth. The passive voice shall be taken away indicates divine action—God removes the veil through the Spirit's work. Human turning is met with divine unveiling.

Historical Context

Paul's emphasis on turning "to the Lord" deliberately evokes the Shema (Deuteronomy 6:4-5), Israel's central confession, while identifying "the Lord" as Christ (see verse 17). This was central to early Christian apologetics: Jesus is Yahweh incarnate, the God of Israel. Romans 10:9-13 makes this explicit:

confessing "Jesus is Lord" fulfills Joel's prophecy that "whosoever shall call upon the name of the LORD shall be saved" (Joel 2:32). Turning to Christ is turning to Yahweh, and this turning results in the veil's removal—spiritual sight, understanding, transformation.
