

2 Corinthians 5:18

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And all things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation;

Analysis

And all things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ—Ta de panta ek tou Theou tou katalaxantos hēmas heautō dia Iēsou Christou (τὰ δὲ πάντα ἐκ τοῦ θεοῦ τοῦ καταλλάξαντος ἡμᾶς ἐαυτῷ διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ). Ek tou Theou (ἐκ τοῦ θεοῦ, "from God") identifies God as new creation's source—grace initiative, not human achievement. Katallassō (καταλλάσσω) means "to reconcile, restore relationship between estranged parties." Katalaxantos (καταλλάξαντος, aorist participle) emphasizes God's completed action. Reconciliation assumes prior alienation—sin made us God's enemies (Romans 5:10). God initiates and accomplishes reconciliation through Christ's mediating work.

And hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation—Kai dontos hēmin tēn diakonian tēs katallagēs (καὶ δόντος ἡμῖν τὴν διακονίαν τῆς καταλλαγῆς). Diakonia (διακονία) means "service, ministry." Katallagē (καταλλαγή, noun form) is reconciliation itself. God doesn't merely save us but commissions us—reconciled people become reconcilers. This ministry belongs to all believers (not just apostles)—we are reconciliation's agents, announcing what God accomplished and inviting others into restored relationship. This is evangelism's heart: not recruiting for religion but announcing peace treaty between God and humanity.

Historical Context

Ancient diplomacy used ambassadors to negotiate peace between warring nations. Paul applies this political metaphor to gospel ministry—Christians are heaven's embassy on earth, announcing peace terms. This was bold: calling Rome's subjects to submit to higher King, offering amnesty to divine rebels. Early Christianity was political revolution cloaked in religious language.

Study Questions

1. Do you genuinely grasp that God initiated reconciliation while you were His enemy—how does this fuel evangelistic passion?
2. How are you stewarding the "ministry of reconciliation" God entrusted to you—who needs to hear about restored relationship with God?
3. Are you living as reconciliation's agent in your relationships—pursuing peace and restoration as God pursued you?
