

2 Corinthians 8:12

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

For if there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not.

Analysis

For if there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not—Paul establishes a crucial principle: ei gar hē prothumia prokeitai ('if the readiness/willingness is present'), giving is euprosdektos (εὐπρόσδεκτος, 'well-received/acceptable/welcome') kath' ho ean echē (καθ' ὁ ἐὰν ἔχῃ, 'according to whatever one has'), not kath' ho ouk echei ('according to what one does not have'). This verse liberates both rich and poor: God judges generosity proportionally, not absolutely.

The phrase hē prothumia (ἡ προθυμία, 'eagerness/readiness/willingness') appears first—disposition matters more than amount. A widow's two mites (Mark 12:41-44) can exceed a millionaire's surplus because God weighs heart alongside gift. Simultaneously, Paul prevents Corinthian excuse-making: those with resources can't claim they have nothing. The principle kath' ho echei ('according to what one has') requires honest assessment of capacity. This balanced approach avoids two errors: demanding impossible sacrifice, or accepting token generosity from the wealthy. Proportionate giving reflects both grace (it's God-enabled) and responsibility (it requires honest stewardship).

Historical Context

This principle addressed economic inequality in Corinthian house churches where slaves and day-laborers worshiped alongside shop-owners and wealthy patrons. Paul teaches that both groups can give acceptably—slaves through small offerings given gladly, wealthy through substantial gifts still proportionate to their resources. This leveled traditional Roman patronage systems where only elite generosity received public honor.

Study Questions

1. How does proportionate giving free you from both pride (if wealthy) and shame (if poor)?
2. What would honest assessment of 'what you have' reveal about your giving capacity?
3. How does God evaluate your generosity: by amount given or percentage sacrificed?
