

2 Corinthians 8:7

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Therefore, as ye abound in every thing, in faith, and utterance, and knowledge, and in all diligence, and in your love to us, see that ye abound in this grace also.

Analysis

Therefore, as ye abound in every thing, in faith, and utterance, and knowledge, and in all diligence, and in your love to us, see that ye abound in this grace also—Paul catalogues Corinthian spiritual strengths: pistis (πίστις, 'faith'), logos (λόγος, 'word/utterance'), gnōsis (γνῶσις, 'knowledge'), spoudē (σπουδή, 'earnestness/diligence'), and agapē (ἀγάπη, 'love'). These echo 1 Corinthians 1:5-7 where Paul acknowledged their giftedness. The verb perisseuō (περισσεύω, 'abound/overflow/excel') appears twice—they excel in spiritual gifts but must also excel in tautē tē chariti ('this grace') of giving.

Paul's pastoral wisdom shines here: he affirms genuine strengths before addressing weakness. The Corinthians were doctrinally informed and charismatically gifted but practically inconsistent. Paul doesn't minimize their gifts; rather, he shows that spiritual excellence without generous stewardship is incomplete. The phrase tē ex hymōn en hēmin agapē ('your love to us') reminds them of relational bonds that should motivate material support. Maturity means all graces working in harmony—doctrine, devotion, and dollars aligned.

Historical Context

Corinth was a wealthy commercial city at the crossroads of Mediterranean trade. The church included both slaves and wealthy householders (1 Corinthians 11:17-22). Their theological sophistication and spiritual giftedness (evidenced by extensive charismatic activity in 1 Corinthians 12-14) didn't automatically translate to financial generosity. Paul had to teach them that gospel transformation affects economic behavior, not just religious experience.

Study Questions

1. Which spiritual 'graces' come easily to you, and which require more cultivation?
2. How can theological knowledge and spiritual experience coexist with financial stinginess?
3. What would it mean for you to 'abound' in generosity as you do in other areas of faith?
