

2 Peter 1:19

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day star arise in your hearts:

Analysis

We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day star arise in your hearts. After citing eyewitness experience (vv. 16-18), Peter surprisingly declares "we have also a more sure word of prophecy" (καὶ εχομεν̄ bebaioteron ton prophētikon logon, καὶ ἔχομεν βεβαιότερον τὸν προφητικὸν λόγον). This doesn't mean prophecy is more certain than apostolic eyewitness but that apostolic experience confirms and establishes prophetic Scripture's reliability. The Transfiguration validated Old Testament prophecies about Messiah's glory.

"Whereunto ye do well that ye take heed" (ὅτι καλῶς ποιεῖτε προσεχόντες) urges careful attention to Scripture. Peter compares it to "a light that shineth in a dark place" (λύχνον φαίνοντι εν αὐχμέρῳ τόπῳ, λύχνω φαίνοντι ἐν αὐχμηρῷ τόπῳ)—a lamp illuminating murky darkness. The present age is morally and spiritually dark; Scripture provides light for navigation until "the day dawn, and the day star arise in your hearts" (ἡώς δέντεντον διαγαστήν καὶ φόσφορον ανατελήντεν ταῖς καρδιαῖς ὑμῶν).

"Day star" (φόσφορος, φωσφόρος, literally "light-bearer") is the morning star (Venus), heralding dawn. This likely refers to Christ's return (Rev 22:16) or the full illumination believers will receive at glorification. "In your hearts" indicates internal enlightenment accompanying external revelation. Until Christ returns fully manifesting truth, believers must attend carefully to Scripture's prophetic light, which guides through present darkness toward future glory.

Historical Context

Judaism highly valued prophetic Scripture as God's revealed word, meticulously preserving and studying it. Jesus affirmed Scripture's authority (Matt 5:17-18; John 10:35) and showed how it testified to Him (Luke 24:27, 44-47). The early church inherited this reverence for Old Testament Scripture while recognizing apostolic writings as equally authoritative (2 Pet 3:15-16).

The metaphor of light in darkness pervades biblical theology (Ps 119:105; Prov 6:23; Isa 9:2; John 1:4-9; 8:12). The present evil age, under Satan's dominion (2 Cor 4:4; Eph 2:2; 1 John 5:19), is morally dark, unable to know God apart from revelation. Scripture functions as God's self-disclosure, illuminating truth about Him, humanity, salvation, and living rightly. Until Christ returns bringing full knowledge (1 Cor 13:12), believers depend on Scripture's light for guidance.
