

2 Thessalonians 3:10

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

For even when we were with you, this we commanded you, that if any would not work, neither should he eat.

Analysis

For even when we were with you, this we commanded you, that if any would not work, neither should he eat—when we were with you recalls Paul's initial Thessalonian ministry. This we commanded (touto parēngellomen, τοῦτο παρηγέλλομεν, gave authoritative order): if any would not work (ei tis ou thelei ergazesthai, εἴ τις οὐ θέλει ἐργάζεσθαι, refuses to work), neither should he eat (mēde esthietō, μηδὲ ἐσθιέτω).

This isn't about inability to work (disability, unemployment) but unwillingness—thelō (θέλω, to will, desire). Those capable of labor who refuse shouldn't receive community support. This prevents enabling laziness. Work is God's creation ordinance (Gen. 2:15), not a curse. Christians must work to eat, avoiding both forced dependency and unjust exploitation of charity.

Historical Context

Greco-Roman society had large unemployed populations living off patrons or government grain doles. Christianity introduced dignified labor as normative, regardless of class. Paul's principle protected church resources for truly needy (widows, orphans, disabled) while refusing to subsidize laziness.
