

2 Timothy 1:14

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

That good thing which was committed unto thee keep by the Holy Ghost which dwelleth in us.

Analysis

That good thing which was committed unto thee keep by the Holy Ghost which dwelleth in us. Paul refers to "that good thing" (tēn kalēn parathēkēn, τὴν καλὴν παραθήκην)—literally "the good deposit." This echoes verse 12's deposit metaphor but reverses perspective. In v. 12, Paul deposited himself to Christ's keeping; here, God has deposited gospel truth to Timothy's keeping. This deposit is "good" (kalēn, καλήν)—beautiful, noble, excellent—infinately valuable treasure entrusted to finite, fallible men.

Timothy must "keep" (phylaxōn, φύλαξον)—guard, protect, preserve intact. The verb suggests vigilant protection against theft or corruption. False teachers constantly threatened to corrupt gospel truth with legalism, speculation, or compromise. Timothy's solemn responsibility is preserving pure doctrine and transmitting it faithfully to the next generation (2:2). This guarding isn't passive preservation but active defense against error and positive proclamation of truth.

Critically, this keeping occurs "by the Holy Ghost which dwelleth in us" (dia pneumatōs hagiou tou enoikountos en hēmin, διὰ πνεύματος ἁγίου τοῦ ἐνοικοῦντος ἐν ἡμῖν). Human effort cannot preserve divine truth—only the indwelling Holy Spirit enables faithful guardianship. The same Spirit who inspired Scripture (3:16) empowers its preservation and proclamation. The participle "dwelling" (enoikountos, ἐνοικοῦντος) indicates permanent residence—the Spirit doesn't visit occasionally but continuously indwells believers, providing ongoing enablement for faithful ministry.

Historical Context

The metaphor of sacred deposit was particularly meaningful in ancient culture. Pagan temples often served as banks where valuable items were deposited for safekeeping, trusting priests to guard them faithfully. Roman law severely punished those who violated sacred trusts. Paul applies this concept to gospel stewardship—God has entrusted the church with infinitely valuable truth that must be preserved intact. Timothy's generation faced the crucial transition from eyewitness apostles to second-generation leaders. Would the faith be preserved pure or corrupted? Paul's emphasis on faithful transmission (2:2) and guarding the deposit through the Spirit's power addressed this critical concern.

Study Questions

1. What specific aspects of "the good deposit"—gospel truth, sound doctrine, biblical teachings—are you actively guarding against contemporary corruption or compromise?
2. How are you relying on the indwelling Holy Spirit's power rather than mere human effort to preserve and proclaim truth faithfully?
3. In what ways are you faithfully transmitting the gospel deposit you've received to trustworthy people who will teach others (2:2)?
