

2 Timothy 2:13

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

If we believe not, yet he abideth faithful: he cannot deny himself.

Analysis

If we believe not, yet he abideth faithful: he cannot deny himself. The hymn's final couplet addresses believer unfaithfulness versus Christ's faithfulness. "If we believe not" (ei apistoumen, εἰ ἀπιστοῦμεν) can mean either "if we are faithless" or "if we disbelieve." Context favors "are faithless"—failing to trust fully, wavering in faith, showing weakness. This differs from verse 12's outright denial. Here Paul addresses struggling believers whose faith wavers but doesn't wholly fail.

The promise: "yet he abideth faithful" (ekeinos pistos menei, ἐκεῖνος πιστὸς μένει). The pronoun ekeinos (ἐκεῖνος) emphasizes Christ—"that one," contrasting human faithlessness with divine faithfulness. The verb menō (μένω) means remain, continue, abide—Christ's faithfulness is unchanging, permanent, not dependent on human faithfulness. Even when believers falter, Christ remains faithful to His covenant promises.

The basis: "he cannot deny himself" (arnēsasthai gar heauton ou dynatai, ἀρνήσασθαι γὰρ ἑαυτὸν οὐ δύναται). Christ's faithfulness stems from His unchanging character—He cannot act contrary to His nature. To abandon His elect people would contradict His covenant promises and divine character. God's faithfulness doesn't depend on human performance but on His immutable nature (Numbers 23:19, Hebrews 6:18).

Historical Context

This verse provided crucial pastoral comfort in persecution. Many Christians experienced fear, doubts, wavering faith when facing torture and death. Did temporary weakness mean loss of salvation? Paul reassures: Christ remains faithful even when believers struggle. This echoes Old Testament covenant theology where God remained faithful despite Israel's repeated failures. The doctrine of perseverance of the saints rests here: true believers may falter but cannot finally fall away because Christ holds them (John 10:28-29, Philippians 1:6).
