

Acts 1:24

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And they prayed, and said, Thou, Lord, which knowest the hearts of all men, shew whether of these two thou hast chosen,

Analysis

The appeal to God as 'heart-knower' (Greek 'kardiognostes') acknowledges that leadership selection requires divine insight beyond human perception. This prayer demonstrates the early church's submission to God's sovereignty in decision-making, refusing to trust human wisdom alone for apostolic appointment.

Historical Context

This prayer preceded choosing Matthias to replace Judas, restoring the apostolic twelve. The practice of casting lots (Acts 1:26) was common in Judaism but notably absent in later church decisions after Pentecost, suggesting Spirit guidance replaced external methods.
