

Acts 10:25

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And as Peter was coming in, Cornelius met him, and fell down at his feet, and worshipped him.

Analysis

When Peter entered Cornelius's house, 'Cornelius met him, and fell down at his feet, and worshipped him.' Cornelius's gesture, whether reverence or worship, was inappropriate. Peter's response (v.26) corrected this immediately. This incident warns against offering to any human the worship due God alone. From a Reformed perspective, this safeguards against the Catholic error of venerating saints and clergy - all humans are fellow servants (Revelation 19:10), unworthy of worship. Peter's humility contrasts with later papal claims to receive veneration.

Historical Context

In Roman culture, prostration before superiors was common. Cornelius may have meant respectful homage, but in a religious context, this gesture approached worship. Peter, as a Jew, understood the danger of anything resembling worship of creatures.
