

Acts 10:26

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

But Peter took him up, saying, Stand up; I myself also am a man.

Analysis

Peter's response - 'Stand up; I myself also am a man' - demonstrates appropriate humility and proper theology. Peter refused any special status beyond fellow humanity. This equality before God establishes that ministers are servants, not mediators between God and man (1 Timothy 2:5). Reformed theology maintains the priesthood of all believers - no human mediator stands between believers and God except Christ. Peter's humility here contradicts claims of papal supremacy developed later in church history.

Historical Context

This occurred circa AD 40-41 in Caesarea at Cornelius's house. Peter's Jewish background made him particularly sensitive to worship belonging to God alone (Exodus 20:3-5). His response established a pattern for Christian leaders - servants, not lords.

1. What does Peter's declaration teach about the equality of all believers before God?
2. How does this passage undermine claims of special human mediatorial authority?
3. Why is humility essential for church leaders and ministers?
