

Acts 13:20

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And after that he gave unto them judges about the space of four hundred and fifty years, until Samuel the prophet.

Analysis

And after that he gave unto them judges about the space of four hundred and fifty years—Paul's sermon in Pisidian Antioch recounts Israel's history from Egyptian bondage through the period of the judges. The 450-year timeframe has prompted scholarly discussion: some manuscripts place this duration before the judges (covering Egyptian bondage, wilderness wandering, and Canaan's conquest), while others include the judges themselves. The Greek phrase hōs etesin tetrakosiois kai pentēkonta (ὥς ἔτεσιν τετρακοσίοις καὶ πεντήκοντα) indicates an approximate period.

Until Samuel the prophet (ἕως Σαμουὴλ τοῦ προφήτου)—Samuel marks the crucial transition from the chaotic judge era to the monarchy. As both the last judge and first prophet of a new order, Samuel embodied God's faithful leadership before Israel's rebellious demand for a king. Paul's sermon narrative builds toward Christ as God's ultimate appointed ruler, showing how even Israel's monarchy under David was preparatory.

Historical Context

Paul delivered this sermon around AD 47-48 during his first missionary journey. Speaking in a synagogue, he employed a historical survey familiar to Jewish audiences—a rhetorical pattern seen throughout Acts (7:2-53, 13:16-41). The judges period (c. 1375-1050 BC) represented Israel's theocratic government, where God raised up deliverers in cycles of apostasy and repentance. Samuel (c.

1100-1020 BC) anointed both Saul and David, bridging the era of judges to the Davidic monarchy from which Messiah would come.

Study Questions

1. How does Paul's historical survey demonstrate God's patient faithfulness through Israel's repeated cycles of rebellion and deliverance?
2. Why is Samuel's role as the transition figure from judges to kings significant in understanding God's redemptive plan culminating in Christ the King?
