

Acts 14:9

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

The same heard Paul speak: who stedfastly beholding him, and perceiving that he had faith to be healed,

Analysis

The same heard Paul speak—The crippled man's faith arose from hearing gospel proclamation, illustrating Romans 10:17: 'faith cometh by hearing.' Paul's action—stedfastly beholding him (Greek atenisas autō)—describes intense, penetrating gaze, the same verb used of Peter's look at the lame man (Acts 3:4). Paul perceived that he had faith to be healed (Greek echei pistin tou sōthēnai). The verb sōthēnai means both physical healing and spiritual salvation, showing how physical miracles in Acts point to spiritual redemption. Paul's discernment parallels Jesus' recognition of faith before healing.

Historical Context

In pagan Lystra, this man likely knew nothing of Jewish Messianic hope. His faith arose purely from Paul's gospel preaching, demonstrating that saving faith transcends cultural or religious background. The public nature of this healing would profoundly impact the watching pagan audience.
