

Acts 15:16

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

After this I will return, and will build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up:

Analysis

---

After this I will return, and will build again the tabernacle of David—James quotes Amos 9:11-12 (LXX) at the Jerusalem Council to justify Gentile inclusion without circumcision. The Greek σκηνήν (skēnēn, tabernacle/tent) refers to David's fallen dynasty. The verb ἀνοικοδομήσω (anoikodomēsō, I will rebuild) emphasizes God's sovereign restoration, not human effort.

Which is fallen down (τὴν πεπτωκυῖαν)—The perfect participle indicates the completed state of David's house after the exile. James argues that Christ's resurrection fulfills this promise, establishing a restored kingdom that now includes Gentiles "upon whom my name is called" (v. 17). This isn't ethnic Israel's political restoration but the Messiah's universal reign through the church, vindicating Peter's report of Gentile conversions (v. 7-11).

Historical Context

The Jerusalem Council (c. AD 49-50) addressed whether Gentile converts needed circumcision for salvation. James, the half-brother of Jesus and leader of the Jerusalem church, settled the dispute by demonstrating that Amos prophesied Gentile inclusion in the restored Davidic kingdom. His authoritative ruling shaped the church's missionary strategy and prevented a fatal split between Jewish and Gentile believers.

Study Questions

1. How does James's interpretation of Amos show that Old Testament promises find fulfillment in Christ's church, not merely ethnic Israel?
2. What does this passage teach about using Scripture to resolve theological disputes in the church?
